John Brown was fiercely committed to the militant abolitionist cause, a crusade that culminated in Brown's raid on the federal armory at Harper's Ferry in 1859 and his subsequent execution. Less well known is his devotion to his family, and to him, two of Brown's sons were killed at Harper's Ferry, but the commitment of his wife and daughters often goes unacknowledged. In the tie that bound us, Bonnie Laughlin-Schultz reveals for the first time the depth of the Brown women's involvement in his cause and their crucial roles in preserving and transforming his legacy after his death, as detailed by Laughlin-Schultz. Brown's second wife, Mary Ann Day Brown, and his daughters, Ruth Brown Thompson, Annie Brown Adams, Sarah Brown, and Ellen Brown Fablinger, were in many ways the most ordinary of women, contending with chronic poverty and lives that were quite typical for poor rural nineteenth-century women. However, they also lived extraordinary lives, crossing paths with such figures as Frederick Douglass and Lydia Maria Child and embracing an abolitionist moral code that sanctioned antislavery violence in place of the more typical female world of petitioning and pamphleteering. In the aftermath of John Brown's raid at Harper's Ferry, the women of his family experienced a particular kind of celebrity among abolitionists and the American public in their roles as what daughter Annie called "relics of Brown's raid." They tested the limits of American memory of the Civil War, especially the war's most radical aim: securing racial equality. Because of their longevity, Annie, the last of Brown's daughters, died in 1926 and their position as symbols of the most radical form of abolitionist agitation the story of the brown women illuminates the changing nature of how americans remembered brown s raid radical antislavery and the causes and consequences of the civil war
