literature s children offers a new way of thinking about how literature for children functions didactically it analyses the nature of the practical critical activity which the child reader carries out emphasising what the child does to the text rather than what he or she receives from it through close readings of a range of so called golden age novels for children which continue to shape our understanding of what children s literature entails including the railway children the wind in the willows the hobbit and mid 20th century series fiction it demonstrates how the child critic resists the processes of idealisation at work in such texts by bringing together ideas from literary theory and the philosophy of education drawing in particular on the work of the philosopher john dewey it provides a compelling new account of the complex relationships between literary aesthetics and literary didacticism
