this book offers an engrossing portrayal of the early years of the christian movement from the perspective of the romans there is a broad consensus among biblical scholars that creation ex nihilo from nothing is a late hellenistic concept with little inherent connection to genesis 1 and other biblical creation texts in this book nathan j chambers forces us to reconsider the question arguing in favor of reading this chapter of the bible in terms of ex nihilo creation and demonstrating that there is a sound basis for the early christian development of the doctrine drawing on the theology of augustine of hippo and thomas aquinas chambers considers what the ex nihilo doctrine means and does in classical christian dogma he examines ancient near eastern cosmological texts that provide a potential context for reading genesis 1 recognizing the distance between the possible historical and theological frameworks for interpreting the text he illuminates how this doctrine developed within early christian thought as a consequence of the church's commitment to reading genesis 1 as part of christian scripture through original close readings of the chapter that engage critically with the work of jon levenson hermann gunkel and brevard child's chambers demonstrates that far from precluding interpretive possibilities reading genesis 1 in terms of creation from nothing opens up a variety of interpretive avenues that have largely been overlooked in contemporary biblical scholarship timely and innovative this book makes the case for a new or recovered framework for reading genesis 1 that will appeal to biblical studies scholars and seminarians
