monsters have taken many forms across time and cultures yet within these variations monsters often evoke the same paradoxical response disgust and desire we simultaneously fear monsters and take pleasure in seeing them and their role in human culture helps to explain this apparent contradiction monsters are created in order to delineate where the acceptable boundaries of action and emotion exist however while killing the monster allows us to cast out socially unacceptable desires the prevalence of monsters in both history and fiction reveals humanity's desire to see and experience the forbidden we seek write about and display monsters as both a warning and wish fulfilment and monsters therefore reveal that the line between desire and disgust is often thin looking across genres subjects and periods this book examines what our conflicted reaction to the monster tells us about human culture why can a white woman give birth to a black baby while a black woman can never give birth to a white baby in the united states what makes racial passing so different from social mobility why are interracial and incestuous relations often confused or conflated in literature making miscegenation appear as if it were incest werner sollors examines these questions and others in neither black nor white yet both a fully researched investigation of literary works that in the past have been read more for a black white contrast of either or than for an interracial realm of neither nor both and in between from the origins of the term race to the cultural sources of the tragic mulatto and from the calculus of color to the retellings of various plots sollors examines what we know about race analyzing recurrent motifs in scientific and legal works as well as in fiction drama and poetry
